"A Soldier's Story" is one of those movies that's about less than you might think. It begins with the murder of a black sergeant, who is shot near an Army base in Louisiana in 1944. Suspicion immediately points to the local whites, who are not too happy about all these blacks stationed in their branch of the deep South.

A SOLDIER'S STORY moves quickly and there are plenty of "outside" shouts to avoid that claustrophobic, one-dimensional, stage feeling. Like so many other reviewers agree this is very well done with "negro soldiers" just dying for a chance to prove their worth and "kill some nazis." But, that is not the focal point of this movie.

A Soldier's Play is a drama by Charles Fuller. The play uses a murder mystery to explore the complicated feelings of anger and resentment that some African Americans have toward one another, and the ways in which many black Americans have absorbed white racist attitudes. This play is loosely based on Herman Melville 's novella Billy Budd.

All that aside, this is a pretty believable story about an Hispanic guy who came out of the wilderness and rose to command an army in Iraq. The good general doesn't clobber any of his army comrades, although he insinuates, and saves his carefully expressed displeasure for the civilian leadership.
