Freud's essay on The Uncanny, published in 1919, also had a lasting impact on Surrealist art. Freud argued that "the uncanny" was a translation of something once familiar into the haunting and disturbing, making it strangely familiar, such as eerie dolls coming to life, doppelgangers, or mirrors and shadows. ...

In a Freudian analysis of Mary Shelley's Frankenstein, the most significant view taken is that the Creature and creator are two aspects of the same person. This comes from Freud's idea of the 'psychologically divided self'. He held that there are three parts of the human mind. The first is the id, containing basic instinctual drives, 'it is the dark, inaccessible part of our personality ... we call it a chaos, a cauldron full of seething excitations', and most importantly, the id ...

For the Romantics, Frankenstein is not a monster but a 'modern Prometheus', as Mary Shelley's book (1818) is subtitled. Frankenstein is a hero because he represents the best qualities of the individual, or the ideal of the Artist, as it was newly conceived in the Romantic imagination.

Yet Frankenstein is fundamentally not about the dangers of science, but of art; it's not a warning about discovery, but about creation. It is our modern world's most sacred of texts, in which God's once-thundering declarations are mute, replaced with the shriek of the monster himself, screaming: 'Accursed creator!', only now across the once-cold Arctic tundra, into years without winters.

Around the time that The Golem was released, Sigmund Freud was writing about the uncanny. His writings, as critic Mark Fisher puts it, led to the association of the uncanny with "what should not be alive acting as if it were". This is the crux of terror of films like The Golem, Metropolis, Frankenstein, etc. We see on screen things that have just enough basis in reality, twisted in such a way that the lingering possibility of their coming to fruition weighs on our minds and frightens us.
