French President Emmanuel Macron. Islam could be the solution to the West's ailing ideology of secularism, writes Dr Abdul Wahid. This week The Spectator magazine published an edited version of a speech made by France's President, Emmanuel Macron, titled 'Building an Islam of the Enlightenment'. Macron bemoaned divisions in French society that he argued were a product of the attitudes of Muslims, as well as anti-Muslim 'uber-secularists' views.

In fact, secularism is very important for Muslims in the modern world, as it is the basis for equality, democracy, freedom, human rights and the autonomy of religion itself. These values have a strong resonance with my reading of Islam even though some conservative voices may disregard these as 'western values.'

Secularism and Islam - Charter for Compassion

Secularism has been a controversial concept in Islamic political thought, owing in part to historical factors and in part to the ambiguity of the concept itself. In the Muslim world, the notion has acquired strong negative connotations due to its association with removal of Islamic influences from the legal and political spheres under foreign colonial domination, as well as attempts to restrict public religious expression by some secularist nation states. Thus,

My 2009 book, Secularism and State Policies toward Religion: The United States, France, and Turkey, was critical of secularism in Turkey by defining it as “French-type” and “assertive” (in terms of excluding religion from the public sphere). I recommended for Turkey a transformation toward “American-type” and “passive” secularism (allowing public visibility of religion).
