subconscious is partially conscious while subliminalis (of a stimulus) below the threshold of conscious perception, especially if still able to produce a response. As a noun subconscious is that part of the mind that is not consciously perceived; one's innermost thoughts.

What is the difference between subconscious and subliminal ...

The so-called new unconscious is aggressively antipsychoanalytic.¹ A very brief definition catches the most important elements: "The cognitive unconscious includes all the mental processes that are not experienced by a person but that give rise to a person's thoughts, choices, emotions, and behavior."² The key here—and the key to my chapter—is these mental processes are "not experienced" by us—and because they are not, they cannot be seen directly.
